Updated: 08/31/2020 by Computer Hope A mouse pad is a flat cloth or plastic object that is commonly rectangular and gives an optical-mechanical mouse more traction and an optical mouse an easier-to-read surface. In most situations, using a mouse pad can make moving the mouse cursor easier and more fluid. The image below shows a SteelSeries cloth mouse pad. Tip When referring to a laptop mouse, it is referred to as a touchpad, not a mouse pad. What is a mouse mat? Alternatively known as a gaming mouse pad or desk pad, a mouse mat is a much larger version of a mouse pad that accommodates the keyboard, mouse, and other accessories. Mouse mats are popular with gamers because of their larger surface, non-slip bases, and are usually higher quality. There are even mouse mats available with RGB edges. Should I use "mouse pad" or "mousepad" in my writing? Both "mouse pad" and "mousepad" are correct and are both widely used. The version you use depends on the style guide you follow. Computer Hope has chosen to have a space between "mouse" and "pad" in all its writing. Do I need a mouse pad? Mouse and touchpad help and support. Accessory, Gaming terms, Mouse, Mouse terms If you haven't heard of peripheral arterial disease, or PAD, you're not alone. This little-known condition doesn't get nearly the attention of its not-so-distant relatives: heart disease and stroke. But it's a prevalent condition—one that can have grave consequences if left unchecked. Educate yourself about PAD today and protect your health What Is It? PAD is the result of the arteries in the legs narrowing from a buildup of plaque (usually cholesterol and other fatty deposits). The condition impedes the flow of blood, which leads to a painful squeezing—known as claudication—in the calf or thigh muscle during walking or other types of exertion. After resting, the pain generally subsides. Telltale Signs The good news is that only about one-third of those with PAD experience the painful constriction and leg cramps. The bad news is that the majority of people with PAD have no symptoms at all—which explains why this disease gets so little attention. But catching it early is vital, because by the time you experience pain in your legs, your arteries have already narrowed by 60 percent or more. Also, should the plaque rupture, you can develop a clot. If your leg is reddish blue while you're sitting, pale when elevated, or has little or no pulse, you may have a clot. Talk to your doctor if you notice these or any other changes in your legs. Discomfort isn't the only result of PAD. Being afflicted with this condition places you in a much higher risk category for heart attack and stroke. In fact, research shows that people with PAD have a fourfold greater risk of having a heart attack and double the risk of a stroke. What's more, people who experience symptoms of PAD have a 15 times greater risk of dying from cardiovascular disease, including heart attack and stroke, and a 1 in 4 chance of dying within two years.The link is straightforward: If you have a buildup of plaque (also known as atherosclerosis) in your legs, you are likely to have plaque in other arteries—such as those leading to the heart or brain. Therefore, diagnosing—and treating PAD—can help you stave off these more serious illnesses Should I Worry? PAD affects 8 to 12 million people in the United States. Risk factors for this condition, which are the same as those that cause blockages in other arteries of the body, include diabetes, smoking, high blood pressure, high cholesterol, or being over age 70. A simple, noninvasive test called the Ankle-Brachial Index (ABI) will determine if you have PAD. The ABI, which measures blood pressure at the ankle and at the arm, can usually be performed in a doctor's office or lab in a matter of minutes. A blood pressure reading that is lower in the ankle than the arm indicates the telltale blockage in the artery between the heart and the leg. What to Do While this blockage is usually considered irreversible, you can take steps to slow down its progression. Here are simple, heart-healthy changes you can make: Quit smoking. It is the single most important factor in reducing your risk of suffering from PAD. Drop as few as 5 pounds. Weight loss can help offset your risk of this disease. Eat a produce-packed, fiber-rich diet that is low in saturated fat, sodium, and cholesterol. Exercise. Simply walking regularly can help burn off calories and lower blood pressure. You should work with your doctor to safely develop a fitness plan. In addition, your physician may prescribe an anti-clotting medication or cholesterol-lowering agent. Talk to your doctor to see if drug therapy is appropriate for you. This content is created and maintained by a third party, and imported onto this page to help users provide their email addresses. CCO/pixel2013/Pixabay Oil changes, tire rotations and brake pad replacements are all important pieces of vehicle maintenance. Most manufacturers recommend changing the oil and rotating the tires every 3,000 to 5,000 miles, but what about the brake pads? It turns out that the answer to the question "when should I replace my brake pads" is not as simple. How Long Do Brake Pads Last?It's difficult to predict exactly how long brake pads last. Their life expectancy depends on several factors, including the type of brake pads you install, road conditions and driving habits. Some people need to replace their brake pads after 25,000 miles, but others wait as long as 75,000 miles.How Driving Conditions Affect BrakesBrake pads work by applying friction to the brake rotor. As you press the brake pedal, you push the pads down on the spinning rotor. This slows the spinning movement until it stops completely. If you press the brake frequently or like to wait until the last minute before using the brakes, you wear away the pads quicker than someone who brakes gradually. Driving in the city wears away brake pads faster than driving on the highway. Each time you stop at a stop sign or traffic light, you lose a bit of the brake pad. You're also more likely to brake abruptly in the city, especially if someone in front of you suddenly changes lanes. If you drive in the mountains or pull a trailer, you also need to replace your brake pads more frequently. The extra pressure on the vehicle makes your brakes work harder. Brake Pad MaterialsThe type of brake pad you choose affects how often you have to replace them. Organic brake pads tend to wear away the quickest, especially if you drive at high speeds or like to "ride the brake." However, they remain a popular choice because they're more affordable and less noisy than metal brakes. Ceramic or metal brake pads tend to last longer than organic brake pads, but they cost more money.Signs of Worn Brake PadsOne of the most common signs of worn brake pads is a squealing or scraping noise when you press the brake pedal. This happens because of an indicator built into the brake pad that makes noise when the pad wears away. If this progresses to a grinding sound, the pads may have worn away so much that the discs and calipers rub together. You may notice other signs as you drive. If the steering wheel vibrates when you press the brake pedal, there may be a problem with the brake pads. This also happens when the rotors are warped, so it's a good idea to have this checked as soon as possible. Similarly, if the brake pedal goes all the way to the floor when you press it, it's time to inspect the brakes. How to Inspect Your BrakesIf you suspect your brake pads are wearing thin, you can visually inspect them. Look through the spokes of the wheel and locate the brake pads sitting on top of the rotor, or brake disk. Minimum thickness of the pads should be at least one-quarter inch. If it looks like less material is left, it's time to get them inspected. You can also ask your mechanic to check the brakes each time you take the vehicle in for an oil change. Having a professional inspect the brakes every few months makes it possible to catch potential problems. This also saves you time since you can get the oil change and brake pad replacement done at the same time. Brake Pad Replacement: DIY or MechanicIf you don't have the time or want to save some money, you can replace your brakes on your own even if your vehicle has an ABS brake system. Make sure you have the tools you need to remove the caliper and caliper bracket to access the brake pads. After taking out the old brake pad, replace the retaining clips and insert the new pads. Then, reassemble the brakes. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET
